PUBLIC SENTIMENT IN ENGLAND. negro should be looked after, and not the ruin and destruction of the slave owner. This view of the question, he thinks, will be better subserved by the acknowledgment of the legislative body to urgent acknowledgment of the slave owner. This independence of the Southern Confederacy, than through a state of indifference, to permit the North to enforce her policy of emancipation of the lack of the public. while the women and children are left entirely without protection, and suffered to die of hunger and loathsome and contagious diseases. In his view of the question, their present condition and prospects do not compare favorably with their condition at home, where they were comfortably provided for and had kind masters and mistresses to look after their welfare. From this we might infer that the "Noble Lord" is a genuine philanthropist, but we should not forget that he is, at the same time, an asinte stateeman. He may have a very genuise affection for Sambo and Dinah, but a giance at his speech will show that the paramount idea in his mind is the permanent severance of the North and the South. The permanent establishment of a colossal republic or this continent is the hidoous specter that has haunted British statesmen and the British aristoursey for the last fifty years. The crowned heads of Europe looked on its gigantic propertions and rapid progress with fear and trembthe institution in her own West India colonies: her emissaries were sent across the Atlantic to preach a crusade against it in this country. They met with a favorable reception and cordial welcome at the hands of our "Northern brothren" who had not the penetration to sound trigue. They rapidly fell into the spare and at ganising an expedition at Annapolis, Md. once inaugurated a systematic politico-religious and given a death blow to the future hopes and prospects of the great American republic. The crowned heads and aristocratic orders of Europe clap their hands in cestacy and cry aloud "it is finished, it is finished." Yes, truly, their diabolical work is done Like another blind Sampson, they have wrested the pillars from beneath the temple and may yet be crushed by its fall. Their great end being thus achieved, we may reasonably look for a change of tone on the subject of slavery. hopes, desires and interests. Lord CAMPBELL has struck the kry note. In his present view of the question, the negro is much better off in his comfortable Southern home as a slave, than he is in his Northern prison house as a freeman. It is evident, from the direction of his thoughts, that he is weening round and preparing to open the artillery of his indignation against the North for their uncheritable and inhuman treat- gardeners will find their labor lost. schleved (the dissolution of the Union) we may may present for funding. reasonably lock for a change of viewe, sentiments and policy in that country on this

A correspondent of the Richmend Exguirer estimates the troops under Sigel, in the ower part of the valley of Virginia as follows: At Hall Town, four thousand; at Charlestown, two thousand; at Martinsburg, three thousand; at Kenrusville, Duffield and other points on the railroad, sighteen hundred. The Baltimore and Ohio railroad is very strictly and closely guarded.
